

Component teams create sequential life cycle development with handoff, WIP queues, and single-specialist groups. This organizational design is not Scrum or agile development, which are instead based on true cross-functional teams that do all work for a feature without handoff. This "mini-waterfall" development is sometimes confused as agile development; that is a misunderstanding.